Then she tripped in, stumbling over her gown, a pink, loose thing, drawn in by a silken cord about her hips; her hair piled up a trifle hastily, caught in its blond tortoise-shell comb; stretching her arms; yawning under those white eyelids, a little swollen from sleep. Dear me! oh, deary me! she would say to him. I danced so late, - so late! He, in the mean while, had sat at the piano in the blue-and-gold ball-room, fuming, fretting, impatient, with his great patience. The belated servants, always taken unawares, always apologetic, hurrying: Quick! quick! shut the window! Monsieur will be cold. - Miss will be down in a minute, sir. - Quick! A maid at the open casement, staring at the street, would turn, in deprecation. The man who made the fires would come in with an armful of chips and papers, blowing on his fingers, tightly grasping his burden. He would kneel at the splendid grate, strike his match, and watch for a moment the blue flame tremble upwards and ascend; then he would shuffle out, on his carpet slippers, returning directly with the huge logs. By and by a warmth would glow, a redolent flame. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
