methylenedioxymethamphetamine (MDMA) is a popular abused amphetamine among young adults. The possibility that MDMA intake may be neurotoxic in humans led to a wealth of studies that demonstrated large doses of MDMA cause damage to serotonin (5-HT) nerve terminals in rats and non-human primates. However, the exact mechanism of MDMA induced neurotoxicity in animals is unknown. The neurochemical and thermal changes associated with experimenter-delivered repetitive doses of MDMA in mice of two different age groups were investigated. The data suggest older mice are more sensitive to the toxic effects of MDMA and that hyperthermia might contribute to MDMA neurotoxicity. Few studies have examined MDMA effects using drug self-administration procedures. MDMA-stimulated lever responses, locomotor activity, thermal effects, in vivo changes in nucleus accumbens (NAcc) DA and 5-HT levels and post-mortem tissue content of DA, and 5-HT were determined after various periods of MDMA abstinence in MDMA-naïve animals, and those self-administering over 20 daily sessions. In general, experience-dependent changes in MDMA were observed in all assessed measurements. | Format: Paperback | Language/Sprache: english | 196 pp.

Reviews

Extensive information for book fans. It is written in basic words and never hard to understand. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.
